The Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) and the Oregon Occupational Safety and Health Division (OR-OHSA) have adopted a standard for locking and tagging out equipment, known as 29 CFR 1910.147. This standard established the minimum requirements for the lock-out of energy isolating devices whenever maintenance or servicing is performed on machines or equipment. It shall be used to ensure that the machine or equipment is stopped, isolated from potentially hazardous energy sources and locked out before employees perform any servicing or maintenance where the unexpected energization or start-up of the machine or equipment or release of stored energy could cause energy and potential for injury.
